

Downtowns

As St. Petersburg, West Palm Beach, Miami, Fort Myers and Sarasota have received local and national attention for the rebirths of their downtowns, the idea of central gathering spots to live, work and play is gaining traction across all types of Florida communities. "There's a growing awareness that it is a missing component," says Sam Poole, an attorney with the Berger Singerman firm in Fort Lauderdale who specializes in development issues.

In New England and the Midwest, most communities were developed with downtowns or village centers as part of the mix. Although many fell on hard times during the shopping mall boom era, the core components remain in place. Florida suburbs, on the other hand, grew with abandon during the 1960s, '70s, '80s and '90s with strip centers, office parks and residential subdivisions. Creating pedestrian-friendly town centers after the fact isn't easy because of the automobile-centered infrastructure already in place. New communities in the suburbs and exurbs have an easier task because they're including town centers with space for retail, office and residential in their plans from the start.

Retrofitting a Downtown

Many established suburban communities are designing downtown-type developments to create a center amid sprawl.

➤ Downtown Dadeland, Miami-Dade County

Retail: 125,000 square feet

Office: none

Residential: 416 condos

In heavily populated Kendall on 7.5 acres across from the main entrance to Dadeland Mall, Gulfside Development is building a pedestrian-friendly Main Street shopping area in seven buildings. Bombay Co., Men's Warehouse, Children's Place, Chili's, Panera Bread and a few others are open or about to open. The plan calls for a mix of national and local retailers.

"Nationals bring recognition, and locals bring flavor," says Karen LaFleur, marketing manager for the leasing agent, Terranova Corp. There are two levels of parking below the street and condos, including some two-level units, on floors 2 through 7 above the retail. Three buildings have been completed. Remaining condos range from $300,000 to $458,000.

from Scratch

➤ Plantation Midtown

Broward County

Retail: 150,000 square feet (in addition to the 2.8 million of existing space) through phase two (2012) plus 250,000 square feet in phase three (2013-2025)

Office: 750,000 square feet (in addition to the 3.6 million of existing space) through phase two plus 1,050,000 square feet in phase three

Residential: 2,000 dwellings will be added through phase two (in addition to the almost 1,000 existing units) plus 1,010 in phase three

In 2002, the city adopted a plan to redevelop parts of the 860-acre central Plantation area, changing it from primarily commercial to a mixed-use area with residential as well as retail and office. Some of the existing retail, office and residential properties will remain, and new space will be added. The project kicks off with WestCity Partners' Veranda at Plantation, a 12-acre British Colonial-style project that will open this year. The design is in the form of a village that includes 45,000 square feet of retail, anchored by Publix, and 201 condos selling for $250,000 to $550,000 in the first phase, with plans for an additional 177 condos and 16 town homes in phase two.

Just getting under way is 321 North, the redevelopment of the 33-acre Fashion Mall property by U.S. Capital Holdings Group, a private “We’re trying to bring some diversity into the design.”

— Jonathan Cardello, architect

equity firm owned by Gang Lu, a steel manufacturing conglomerate in China. The project will keep some parts of Fashion Mall but add a Main Street open-air retail center, 300,000 to 400,000 square feet of Class A office space in two buildings and 400 to 600 condos or apartments. The architectural style will be European modern.

“We’re trying to bring some diversity into the design,” says architect Jonathan Cardello, director of the Miami office of ADD Inc. Some demolition will begin this year. The city has launched a free trolley to transport shoppers and residents to and from major businesses in Midtown.

Seven years ago, this Broward County city of 110,332 started planning for a commercial, political and social downtown center. The development team — Rockefeller Group Development, Kimco Developers and Lowell Homes — has finally started work on the project after an extensive proposal and design process. Five developers responded to Miramar's initial request for proposal, but as the city asked for more details in an extensive vetting, only one presented a final proposal that was acceptable to the city.

Miramar, one of the fastest-growing cities in the U.S., is creating a 54-acre traditional downtown with Mediterranean architecture. The town center will eventually have 175,000 square feet of retail and restaurants, 50,000 square feet of office space, 133 three-

➤ Miramar Town Center

Broward County

Retail: 175,000 square feet

Office: 50,000 square feet

Residential: 133 town homes, 355 condos, 16 live-work residences with storefronts on the ground level and two-story living quarters above story town homes, 355 condos above the retail space, 16 live-work residences and an underground bus transit hub. For now, it has two parking garages that have been built so that they can be "wrapped" with retail, office and live-work units to disguise the parking facilities. In the vicinity of Miramar Town Center, there are already more than 3,500 homes and another 1,300 multifamily units planned.

The city sold 40 acres to the developer and retained 14 acres for public buildings

"We were not going to settle for someone who did not share the vision and purpose."

— Robert Payton, Miramar city manager and green space. Miramar completed a new city hall in 2004, and construction is under way on a library and education center that will house branches of Nova Southeastern University and Broward Community College and a cultural arts center.

➤ Winter Springs Town Center

Seminole County

Retail: 550,000 square feet

Office: 350,000 square feet

Residential: 353 condos

The Winter Springs City Commission adopted a master plan in 1998, but development of a 63-acre town center has been slow. The neo-classical-style project will use a main street, Tuskawilla Road, to link a market square to a quiet area, Magnolia Square. "The idea for the town center is to work, live and play," says Eric Smithers, executive vice president for Charleston, S.C.-based James Doran Co., project developer.

A new Publix and about three dozen restaurants, service businesses and retailers were built five years ago during the initial phase of the project. Last year, construction got under way on more retail and office space and 41 condos. Presales are under way for the first 118 condos of the second phase, priced from $220,000 to $417,000, and land clearing for another phase of retail and another 194 condos begins this summer. The area is within walking distance of the Seminole Trail, a pedestrian and bike pathway.

From the Ground Up

Some new developments are being designed with built-in Main Streets.

➤ Abacoa Town Center

Palm Beach County

Retail: 120,000 square feet in town center, approximately 169,000 square feet at buildout

Office: 47,000 square feet in town center, almost 200,000 square feet at buildout

Residential: 413 units in town center of a total of 859 planned — 5,800 residential units overall by 2012

Design and site plan work began in the early 1990s for this 2,055-acre master-planned community on land once owned by the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation. Three of the four phases of the Main Street-style town center are complete. It includes a mix of about three-dozen local shops, local and regional restaurants and Roger Dean Stadium, the spring training facility for the St. Louis Cardinals and Florida Marlins. Residential units in the town center include condos over the retail space and stand-alone town homes. The fourth phase of the town center, which will be primarily residential, will get under way in 2008. The Scripps Florida campus at Florida Atlantic University is adjacent to the town center.

When the Orlando Naval Training Center closed in 1999, the idea of a traditional neighborhood began to take shape. On 1,100 acres about two miles from downtown Orlando, Baldwin Park Development Co. set in motion a plan for more than 4,000 homes, 1 million square feet of commercial and retail space and 8,000 residents. Plans included a 52-acre town center, Baldwin Park Village, with apartments, restaurants, shops and offices. "It really creates a sense of community," says Chuck Whittall, president of Unicorp National Developments, the village center's developer.

The key to success for any downtown is walkability, says Sam Poole, an attorney with the Berger Singerman firm in Fort Lauderdale who specializes in development issues. "Baldwin Park probably would be at the top of my list," he says.

In the town center itself, there are 177 apartments over a level of retail. They have been so popular that Whittall is planning to double the number of above-retail apartments in a downtown he's developing near Richmond, Va.

For success, homes outside the village should be within a five- to 10-minute walk, says Poole, adding. "The quality of the walk is critical. That means that pedestrians shouldn't

➤ Baldwin Park Village

Orange County

Retail: 212,000 square feet in village center

Office: 220,000 square feet in village center

Residential: 177 apartments in village center, 4,100 residential units communitywide at buildout have to cross major highways or walk near traffic, but it's also important to have interesting buildings and scenic settings to look at along the way."

One of Whittall's first tasks was signing up Publix. "If we couldn't have Publix, we didn't want to do the project," he says. "A village has to have an anchor."

Whittall admits he's disappointed that more national apparel retailers didn't sign on. He chalks that up to the fact that Baldwin Park isn't near a highway. When Unicorp sold the village center to Beverly Hills-based Rubin Pachulski Properties in 2006, Whittall says it was about 90% leased.

Tioga Town Center opened its first two buildings last fall with a Gainesville Health and Fitness Center and Starbucks as anchors and a dozen specialty retailers. Offices are on the second floor.

For more than a decade, Luiz Diaz and his father, Miguel, have been planning Tioga, a 600-acre new traditional town five miles west of Gainesville. Unlike many new urbanism communities, this one is on the edge of town instead of deep within the community. The

▶ Tioga Town Center

Alachua County

Retail: 250,000 square feet

Office: 40,000 square feet

Residential: 80 apartments center will front busy Newberry Road. Luiz Diaz is trying to drive traffic for retailers from both Gainesville and Tioga, which has close to 300 single-family homes, "brownstone" town homes and zero lot line homes and will have more than 1,200 residences at buildout. A second phase of the town center, slated for completion in fall 2008, will include 40 apartments on two floors atop more retail space. Additional rental apartments and retail space is planned.

▶ Tapestry Park

Panama City Beach

Retail: 124,000 square feet

Office: 70,000 square feet

Residential: 366,000 square feet of village center residential plus 144 single-family homes and 40 town homes within walking distance

Mark Tanney, a planner and designer who worked on the traditional towns of Seaside and Rosemary Beach, is developing the 72-acre community, which includes a 15-acre downtown village. The town center will have 10 four-story buildings with 560,000 square feet of retail, restaurant, office and residential space. There is a Publix within several blocks of the community. The first town center building to break ground in January will be the Inn at Tapestry Park, which will include retail on the first floor. About 20 single-family homes have been built, and construction on four town homes will begin this summer.

▶ Online Extras

WEB EXCLUSIVE: For more renderings and photos, visit FloridaTrend.com/Extra.